FAIRCHILD TROPICAL BOTANICAL GARDEN

10901 Old Cutler Road / Website

Fairchild Tropical Botanical Garden is one of Florida's most beautiful gardens, stretching over 83 acres, and an excellent choice for outdoor lovers and nature enthusiasts. Col. Robert H. Montfomre founded the garden in 1938 in honor of his friend Dr. David Fairchild. This tropical plant environmentalist collected many species in the garden, including a giant African baobab tree. The Lin Lougheed Spiny Forest of Madagascar, which shows rare plants from Madagascar's threatened desert ecosystem, is another attraction that highlights the garden's conservation work. Palms, ferns, bromeliads, cycads, and orchids are also among the native and exotic plant species, as are uncommon butterfly species and an African rainbow lizard. Don't miss out on Lisa D. Anness Butterfly Garden, which has plants that attract and support butterflies throughout their life cycles (many native to South Florida), especially from May to October. A must-see in the Magic City.

THE ITALIAN GARDEN AT VIZCAYA MUSEUM & GARDENS

3251 S Miami Ave / Website

Villa Vizcaya is a 50-acre estate with around 10 acres of Italian and French-style gardens inspired by landscape design from the 17th and 18th centuries, developed between 1914 and 1922 by businessman and conservationist James Deering. The native forest that Deering conserved surrounds manicured spots like the maze garden. The walled Secret Garden and the Theater Garden, which display the Garden's profusion of architectural features and ancient sculptures, are not missed. The Italian Garden also contains aspects that blend well with the surrounding subtropical environment. Lush mazes, groomed shrubs, bushes in patterns, rare orchids, theatrical gardens, intricate fountains, and a plethora of enormous structures, geometric arrangements all contribute to the perfect blend of European and subtropical moods. Don't forget to see the David A. Klein Orchidarium, which witnesses rows of rare Cymbidium species. One of the most instagrammable locations in Miami that will make your deed look more upscale.

THE KAMPONG

4013 Douglas Road / Website

The Kampong, named after the Malay or Javanese word for a 'village' or 'cluster' of dwellings, is one of the five gardens part of the National Tropical Botanical Garden. It was once the home of horticulturist and explorer Dr. David Fairchild, who journeyed throughout Southeast Asia and other tropical countries in search of exotic plants to introduce to the U.S. The gardens now feature a diverse collection of tropical fruit cultivars, including more than 50 varieties of mango—all of which can be tasted—and flowering trees. Indulge in the palm collection, which includes South Florida natives like the Royal Palm and Southeast Asian types like the Talipot. Scientists from all over the world visit the Kampong to examine the cycads, palms, and flowering trees. So you can also visit this beautiful garden, accompanied by knowledgeable guides to learn more about the garden's history.

PINECREST GARDENS

11000 SW 57th Ave / Website

Pinecrest Gardens is a 14-acre lush botanical garden with various family-friendly attractions. Exotic tropical plants, water features, twisted rock formations, natural cypress slough, hardwood hammock, and specialty gardens such as a desert garden may all be found in this garden. This beautiful garden is one of Florida's top botanical gardens, with over a thousand varieties of tropical flora. It's a fantastic destination for people of all ages, especially children, as it includes a water feature, petting zoo, fish feeding, flashlight tours, and a playground. Musical concerts, weddings, and farmer markets are held in the garden. Don't miss out on the Botanic Garden, Splash Park, Movie nights, exotic species, amphitheater, educational tour, and more when you visit. This garden will make you want to snap photos for your IG feed at every corner.

MIAMI BEACH BOTANICAL GARDEN

The Miami Beach Botanical Garden is a 2.6-acre urban green space dedicated to sustainability. This garden aims to promote environmental sustainability through the arts, education, and engagement with nature. In this tropical paradise, there are over 200 distinct varieties of vegetation to be found. Nature is at its best in this garden, with palm trees, rare orchids, beautiful fountains, and butterflies. There is a large lawn in the center of the garden where guests can relax and enjoy themselves. On Thursday, you can enjoy Garden after Dark, and every Sunday, the garden hosts regular yoga classes for fitness enthusiasts. Don't forget you see the Koi pond, the Japanese Garden, Edible Garden, Collins Canal Promenade, and Native Garden, which will delight you with natural beauty.

ICHIMURA JAPANESE GARDEN

1101 MacArthur Causeway / Website

Ichimura is a traditional Japanese garden that Kyoshi Ichimura founded in 1958. It was erected with the idea of Cherry Blossoms flowering in Miami; however, they do not survive the Miami climate. As a result, this garden was overrun with Orchids of various types. Currently, this garden serves as a cultural center, hosting a variety of Japanese events and educational sessions. The garden, although small, will make you feel encapsulated by natural beauty, and you will want to take some photos for Instagram. This garden is open to the public and free, so don't miss out on visiting it.

CRANDON PARK

6747 Crandon Blvd / Website

Crandon Park covers 200 acres of magnificent beauty. This area was once the site of the Metro Zoo, an abandoned zoo that now shelters a variety of birds. This garden is considered a "secret garden" because it is not well-known among Miami residents. And after exploring its surroundings, you can take a splash at Crandon Park Beach and take some photos of the beautiful palm trees. A very Miami experience.
