

Super Cute Reasonably Priced Restaurants To Catch Up With A Few Friends

This is the guide to the perfect spots for finally meeting up with those people you haven't seen in six months. They're cute, fun, don't cost too much, and will have you saying, "Let's do it again next week!" with zero intention of following through.

The Mango Moment To End All Mango Moments

Mangoes are having a helluva year. If you're lucky, your own tree (or neighbor's) has gifted you with a fruitful bounty. Or maybe you've participated in one of this summer's mango exchanges. Or perhaps you, like us, had multiple mango moments at restaurants.

If you've been nodding your head in agreement—but especially if you haven't had a chance to have your own mango moment yet—it's our duty to inform you that the biggest one is happening this weekend: The Mango Festival at Fairchild Tropical Botanic Garden.

If you're a mangifera indica nerd, you can learn all about the different mango varieties we have in Miami at one of the festival's lectures. Or if you'd like a tree of your own—pick one up (just bring a container for it). But the best part is that you can eat mango in all its forms: cocktails, smoothies, and tasty dishes. Then relax by the misters in the orchid garden or watch the butterflies flutter around. Mangoes are one of the few things that make Miami summers bearable, and this is the fruit's biggest event of the year.
