

a fun week

I spent this week entertaining the kids, because I didn't sign them up for camp. It's been a long but filling week. I have done more activities than I usually do in a month, but I really had a chance to enjoy them. Usually, by the end of the day with the kids, I am ready to hand them off to the nearest breathing adult, but this week I truly had fun with them. We went to Fairchild Tropical Garden and chased dragons, we went to the movies and watched Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, we played mini golf, and we went bowling and played laser tag. I'm surprised the credit card didn't erupt into flames (lol), but it was a really fun-filled week.

I think I enjoyed it so much because they are off to camp next week and then back to school the week after that! I can't even believe how quickly the summer has flown. I'm kind of ready for a regular routine. But definitely not early wake-ups. We have been enjoying leisurely mornings - I spend about an hour in bed with my journal, devotional and prayers before I get up and moving, and Chloe has been sleeping in until almost 9 every morning. If that's not the ideal way to spend summer mornings, I don't know what is. But last night I took inventory of what I had purchased as far as uniforms, ordered what we were missing, and did some returns. Backpacks and lunchboxes are ready, school supplies are delivered at school already, and we are ready for a brand new school year.
